Stanford Family Mausoleum
The mausoleum, guarded by four marble sphinxes, is the final resting place of the Stanford Family.

Stanford Family Statue
Adjacent to the mausoleum, the Stanford Family statue was cast in bronze in 1899 by Larkin G. Mead.

Angel of Grief
The Angel of Grief, located north of the mausoleum, is a memorial to Jane Stanford’s youngest brother, Henry Clay Lathrop.

Arizona Cactus Garden
The garden, located on the south side of the mausoleum, was designed for Jane and Leland Stanford by landscape architect Rudolf Ulrich between 1881 and 1883.

Stanford Family Carriage
The Brewster C-Spring Landau carriage was the most formal of the three carriages owned by the Stanfords. President Benjamin Harrison rode in it when he visited the West Coast in 1891.

MESSAGE FROM MARC TESSIER-LAVIGNE, PRESIDENT

Welcome to the 2016 Founders’ Celebration. This year, 125 years after Stanford University opened its doors, we honor and celebrate its history and the impact it has had on the world.

Stanford University was established by Jane and Leland Stanford after the death of their son, Leland Jr. They dedicated themselves to “educating other people’s children” and transformed their grief into this living legacy.

The Stanfords were well-traveled and had great appreciation for other cultures. When they established the university, they included a provision in the Founding Grant for museums and galleries of art to ensure that it would be “a university of high degree.”

In the decades since the founding, Stanford University’s commitment to the arts has grown. Anchored by the Cantor Arts Center, with a collection of more than 44,000 works, the arts district also includes the Bing Concert Hall, the Anderson Collection at Stanford, and the McMurtry Building, which houses the Department of Art & Art History.

We hope you will enjoy the exhibitions in the Stanford Family Galleries and the activities offered today commemorating the Stanfords and their vision for this “university of high degree.”
